Common Cold Costing U.S. 5 Billion Yearly

The American Medical Association's new pamphlet on the common cold reports that "Old King Cold" costs the United States $5 billion annually in lost wages, lost production and medical expenses.

More than 150 million days per year are lost from our work force. More than 20 million people suffer from colds on any given wintry day. The common cold is the most costly ailment in our country, as well as in most other countries.

The common cold is defined as an acute upper respiratory tract inflammation that ordinarily is communicable and is caused by viruses. But this definition has little meaning since the popular use of the word "cold" includes everything from a minor sniffle and a nasal obstruction to a disabling illness similar to influenza.

A NUMBER OF viruses produce the symptoms we call a cold, possibly as many as a hundred. The true cold is an infection with one or more viruses.

Current research seems to indicate that colds are harder to catch than has been thought. In controlled studies, close contact for several hours was necessary before cross infection occurred.

Fresh colds appear to be more contagious than older ones, and children's colds have been shown to be more contagious than those of adults. Even apparently well persons may harbor cold viruses and may infect others.

Low temperatures and inclement weather, in themselves, probably have little to do with precipitating colds. Dampness and chill have been suspected of causing colds, but experimental evidence now indicates that they are probably only triggering factors. The relative humidity of the air may be important, however.

THERE IS A SHARP rise in incidence of colds at the time the winter heating season begins. The lowered humidity in heated rooms causes the dry nose and throat which contributes to susceptibility to infection. The nose, throat and lungs work better when the air that is breathed has a relative humidity of about 45 per cent.

Dry mucous membranes cannot clean themselves by action of their cilia, the hairlike structures that move mucus upward out of the respiratory tract. As a result they become more vulnerable to invasion by cold viruses.

No specific treatment, so far available, is effective against the cold virus. Any treatment must be directed toward relief of the symptoms and prevention of complications. The wonder drugs—antibiotics and sulfa—have no effect on viruses.
