Residents Attend Business Seminar

Northwood Institute, Midland, will participate in the third annual Educational Workshop at Delta College Dec. 5. Students from Central Michigan University, Delta College, and Northwood Institute will attend the workshop sponsored by the American Production and Inventory Control Society.

The "management game," the name of which was derived from war games, is the main event of the workshop. It is designed to provide the students with information which will help them improve their ability to do their jobs.

Companies composed of four people engage in the game by the use of generally accepted business practices and management of hypothetical business over a specified period of time. This enables them to compare into contact with different areas of business organization. The management game workshop creates decision-making situations that businessmen face daily. There is ample opportunity for learning by everyone.

The Northwood delegates include Paul Springer, Jon Stittle, James Kenneth Vogt, all from Birmingham.
