Peace Corps Begins Drive For Skilled

More than 250 skilled workers have applied for Peace Corps service as a result of experimental recruiting visits to some of the nation's leading industrial plants. Director Sargent Shriver announced. The recruiters are now telling the Peace Corps story at the Chrysler and Ford Motor Co. plants in Detroit. As a result of the response to this experimental recruiting, a new department has been set up at Peace Corps headquarters to spearhead the blue collar drive, Shriver said.

"This could turn out to be the working man's Rhodes Scholarship," Shriver said. "We hope to have 3,000 skilled workers taking advantage of this program by Christmas of 1965."

THE NEED FOR workers with manual skills is mounting steadily, and the Peace Corps has been unable to fill these requests. It is hoped that the blue collar drive will help to meet this need. The AFL-CIO and 20 leading U. S. industrial concerns are cooperating in the program, promoting leaves of absence and working out policies to guarantee that employees who join the Peace Corps can have their jobs back when they return from overseas—with no loss of seniority or pension rights. "These volunteers are generally older and more skilled," Shriver explained. Many of these skilled blue collar applicants are in their 30's and 40's, selection records indicate. Many are married to women who also have skills needed in Peace Corps projects, so married couples can serve together.

See Prior Records In One-car Deaths

A sampling survey done by the Driver Improvement section of the Michigan Department of State revealed that most drivers killed in one-car accidents have prior violation and speeding records.

The significant aspects of the study were:

- All but five of the 40 drivers studied had previous convictions for speeding ranging from one to 12 infractions and had averaged more than two prior speeding convictions.
- Twelve of the 40 drivers had previous reckless driving convictions.
- All but three of the drivers had prior traffic conviction records ranging from two to 38 points, with these totals not limited to the past two-year period.
- Even with the limitations in receiving accident reports since neither Detroit nor Grand Rapids submits accident reports to the Department of State a total of 27 of the 40 drivers had been involved in prior accidents.
- More than half of the vehicles involved were 1960 or older models.
