Construct Bikeways On College Campus

In this age of the automobile, and midst a motor traffic tangle on its own campus, Michigan State University is building "freeways" for bicycles.

The network of bike routes comprises four miles of specially-constructed roadway, much of it developed during the past year.

Complete with exit ramps and limited-access interchanges, divided "bikeways" criss-cross lawns and fields, speeding a growing army of cyclists from class to class.

DUE TO THE ban on student use of automobiles imposed this fall, there has been a sharp increase in bicycle traffic.

Some 6,200 bicycles are registered with police, and scores more that are registered with authorities in other communities are ridden regularly on the campus.

The new bike paths are about 18 inches wide, of concrete or asphalt paving, many of them with one-way lanes separated by a median strip. At appropriate places there are access ramps, to eliminate the need of hopping curbs.

NEAR PEDESTRIAN crosswalks, the warning "yield" is painted on the paved surface, and similar signs have been stenciled on sidewalks near intersection with the bike paths, advising pedestrians to "watch for bikes." Other signs tell of one-way traffic and indicate that the paths are for "bikes only."

Although the bike paths are very safe in that they minimize the possibility of car-bike accidents, there is somewhat more hazard of collision with pedestrians.

Students have been heard to complain of encountering an absent-minded professor walking on the bike paths—the wrong way, even.

B'ham to Sell 70-Acre Site At Gravel Pit

Birmingham commissioners authorized the administration to place a 70-acre parcel of City-owned land on the market Monday night.

City Manager L. R. Gare said that based on two independent appraisals the minimum acceptable price for the land would be $375,000.

The parcel, known as the Walker gravel pit, is on the north side of Maple near Crooks.

Voters approved the sale at last April's city election.

Commissioners authorized Gare to advertise for sealed bids. The method of sale is the so-called "probate court" method, Gare said.

"UNDER THIS procedure the original proposals are held for two weeks, during which time additional sealed bids are received provided that each of them is at least five per cent greater than the highest proposal initially received," Gare said.

The procedure is repeated at two-week intervals until the commission accepts the highest bid or rejects all bids.

Hills to Add 4 to Public Safety Force

Three officers and one civilian employee will be added to the Bloomfield Hills Department of Public Safety in an expansion program designed to increase protection for the city's residents.

The move was authorized by the city commission last week, along with two other changes that are expected to increase the efficiency of the department.

Commissioners approved the contracting of a janitorial service at a cost of $1,300 a year. This will release public safety officers on fire duty for more important duties.

THE COMMISSION also set a mandatory retirement age of 60 for all public safety officers and will make a study of increased retirement benefits before the new rule takes effect on June 30.

The revisions will cost the City about $27,000 a year.

The three new officers will function as both policemen and firemen under Bloomfield Hills' integrated public safety system. The civilian aide will act as desk clerk, thereby freeing an officer for police and fire duty.

Applicants for the new positions are presently being screened, according to Robert Stadler, public safety director, and four persons may be hired by Jan. 1.

"WITH THE additional manpower, we can put more cars on the road at all times," Stadler said, "and by rearranging the work schedule we can get more protection out of the manpower we have."

The new employes will boost the total in the public safety division to 20 men.
