How To Revive City's 'Dead Heart'

If We Will but Listen ...

In the "People's Column" letter at the right, a recent visitor to our city expresses his views of Birmingham. They are particularly valuable to us in that they come from an unjaundiced eye. They are free of any of the emotions that normally might clutter the views of we who live here. Sentimentality stands in our way.

Many residents have strong convictions often these convictions are based primarily

An outsider may be able to view Bir-mingham's character and its community values much more objectively. Surely, the outsider can be of help to us in placing into proper perspective whatever qualities we have as a community, qualities that should as a community, qualities that should otected and enhanced. Let us, at least, be protected and enhance listen to what he says.

IF WE HAVE the qualities which the author describes in his letter, they should suggest to our own citizens the need of doing something to preserve and enhance

To the extent we are unique and do have worthwhile attributes, we have a responsi-bility as individual citizens and as a combility as individual citzens and as a com-munity to build upon them; to help pre-pare a more meaningful future for our children and their children. The letter writer compares the heart of Birmingham to that which has been as-cribed to Australia—though he says ours cribed to Australia—though he says ours is dead "in a less final way."

Ah, then, there is hope for the future. We can effer some encouragement. Here is the realization that we can build a more beautiful city that will be an even greater source of pride to us than it has been in

THE AUTHOR credits us with the "val-

When a civil rights march was proposed for the Birmingham area, many residents felt an apprehension that our community might end up as a focal point of national publicity, having the same name as a town in Alabama which has been guilty of not

There was concern that this would arouse agitation within a community which as a whole is free from discriminatory The local Council of Churches, apparent ly to forestall misunderstanding, resched-uled the march from last fall to Brother-hood Sunday, Feb. 9, and took steps to make it a religious procession instead of

There has always been some question of whether political marches win or lose a political one.

elements of the status quo." Let us utilize these assets, putting them to work for us these assets, putting the in a more positive way.

Let us apply ourselves diligently and enthusiastically to programs designed to assure progress for our community.

We must remember that no commu ever stands still for any length of time.

Decay sets in and slow deterioration takes place where neglect prevails.

The only way to make sure that this doesn't happen to Birmingham is to plan for the future, to take steps now to see that our community values grow rather

THE LETTER writer urges development of a civic center in the heart of Birming-ham (the general area around Shain Park) n space that would be character istic of all facets of our lives.

Let us, then, give thought to this plan; the views expressed by this non-Bir-ingham resident who cared enough for our city to tell us what he thinks. Let us realize that some aspects can be accepted in their entirety while others must be

We can profit from this outsider's views We can pront from this outsider's views of our city. That he took the time and the effort to set them down in writing attests to the significance of the community values

We can gain, too, from the opinions of other visitors to our city. We urge our readers to invite their out-of-town guests to express their views in letters to the edias Mr. Kollar has done.

tor, as Mr. Kollar has done.

Let us accept our responsibilities as individuals and as a community in implementing projects that will preserve and enhance those things that mean so much

Tomorrow is ours, if we prepare for it

Aerial view by City Planner William Brown-ld shows part of area which letter-writer Peter Kollar terms the heart of Birmingham. Iain Park is the open space between the municipal building on the left and Baldwin library on the right in the far background. Jacobson's is the building in the center fore-

PEOPLE'S COLUMN

Create An Urban Space Around Shain Park Area

EDITOR'S NOTE: L. Peter Kollar, senior lecturer in architecture at the University of New South Wales and a practicing architect in Sydney, Australia, recently came to Birmingham to visit internationally -known photographer Baltzar Korab. He pene here his reactions to Birmingham and his thoughts on what it could do for its future.

To the Editor:

Can any visitor's impressions of Birmingham be isolated from his image of the surrounding world? Mine certainly can't.
They mingle with those of the neighboring townships, of Detroit which in their magnet, of the United States in general and indeed of the whole world which we call "progressive" and "modern."

ern."

In this modern world, places like Birmingham are numerous and from the bird's-eye view there is little to distinguish one from the other. The causes and

HAPPENINGS OF YESTERYEAR WILL BE FOUND ON 7-B

BE FOUND ON 7-8

processes that brought them into existence are alike, their formal development largely similar. One would find them around Birmingham in England, around Hamburg in Germany, around Hamburg in Barail, around Hamburg in Barail, around Hamburg in Barail, around Hamburg in Barail, around Hamburg in Hamburg parking meters and traffic lights in the center, surrounded by un-related, dimly lit and silent dor-mitories.

Flat Landscape

But the bird's-eye view can only generalize. The close-up, the worm's-eye view alone provides the particular and the unique, which distinguishes each settlement from every other. The singular characteristics are the ones which make a suburb, to the settlement recognizable in its own right within the over-all picture.

What are, then, Birmingham's unique characteristics from the worm's-epe view? To answer this question fairly, it will be best to discuss undesirable and unfortu-nate features separately from those which are valuable and ad-vantageous.

vantageous.

There are certain inherent difficulties with which the present Birmingham is settled for good, and nothing much can be done about them. Coming from the hilly city of Budapest in the first place, from Sydney in the second place and en route from San Francisco in the third place I was specied to the common of th and landscape which is nat.

There are no landmarks to speak of, no vistas to look into and no views to gaze over. A traveller coming from afar has no fixed points to take his bearings.

2 Landmarks

Of course, many cities were built on flat land throughout the history of mankind, but then the people tried to establish some verticality in buildings to relieve the monotonous horizontality of the terrain.

Needless to say, such vertical-ity cannot be applied without dis-crimination as far as purpose, meaning and importance coes.

Traditionally ecclesiastical and civic buildings were the proper, natural and meaningful landmarks in settlements of all shapes and sizes for the past.
Birmingham, however, could furnish only two fixed points for me: the water tower and a semicomplete, building chal in plastic
me: the water tower and a semicomplete, building chal in plastic
me: the water tower and a semicomplete, building chal in plastic furnition of the semistrategian me, furnition of the semistrategian me, furnition of the semimenting and charm. The Rouge River Valley with its surrounding hills inspired me to a momentary vision of house climbing the slopes surrounding the ing hills inspired me to a mo-mentary vision of houses climb-ing the slopes surrounding the civic and shopping areas built with concentrated charm on the riverside. Perhaps Birmingham was founded on the wrong spot.

Poorly Used

Strangely, sometimes we fly 12,000 miles only to discover anew something that we have left be-hind. It is said that Australia has a dead beart, since its center is occupied by a huge desert.

has a dead heart, since its centre is cocupied by a huge desert. Similarly, on a much smaller, scale and in a less final way alone could say that Birmingham has a dead heart, since the area buildings is used practically be no one and is little more than a glorified parking lot. All the shops, traffic and people congest on Maple and Woodward, and along these two ribbons all the commercial, social and enterptamment activities concentrate. One need not chaborate on the total man and the statement and the statement

(See CREATE AN URBAN SPACE, 5-B)

Eccentricities

By HANK HOGAN

The community isn't the only one with its eyes on teen-agers. The legislature has made them the subject of two bills that are now being forcefully debated in the Capitol chambers.

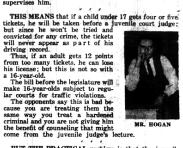

The first bill proposes that minors be issued a different-colored driver's license than those who have reached

The purpose, of course, is to prevent minors from altering the age on their license in order to purchase alcoholic beverages.

With different colors the many controls are the purchase alcoholic beverages. coholic beverages.

With different colors they would have to look for some other ID to alter.

THE SECOND BILL is controversial. At the present time a person can get his driver's license at the age of 16 if he has taken a driver's training program. Cherwise, he must wait until he is 17. The problem is that children below 17 are considered uveniles and cannot be brought before any court but the juvenile court if they are apprehended for violating, the law. And the juvenile court does not convict a child, merely supervises him.

BUT THE PRACTICAL problem is that the juvenile judge is too busy to spend much time on mere traffic violations.

olations.

It seems to me that if a child is old enough to drive e is old enough to be responsible for his own traffic record.

The present system has allowed many teen-agers to drive recklessly and illegally with impunity.

IT IS NOT as bad in Birmingham as it is in most communities because here 16-year-olds are taken before a teen-age traffic court which usually treats them harder than a regular court would do. But unfortunately most communities have not adopted

But unfortunately most communities nave not account this system.

Both of these bills are trying to solve the teen-age problem. Both seem to have merit.

But isn't it too bad that the teen-age problem has to be solved by laws instead of teen-age responsibility?

City Beat

By KEN WEAVER

I met Ike—almost.
The plan of action formed as I sat there watching first one person, then another walk up to the former President and request his autograph.
The occasion was the Republicans' "Dinner with Ike" at Cobo Hall in Detroit on Wednesday night of last week. Many Birmingham-Bloomfield area residents were in attendance.
This is simple, I thought, All I have to do is walk up to Gen. Dwight D. Eisenhower, request his autograph, then casually ask when was the last time he saw then casually ask when was the last time he saw Kevin McCann.

McCANN, president of Defiance College in Defiance, O., was Ike's chief speech writer when he was President. He served under the general during World War II, was his assistant when Ike was president of Columbia University and wrote speeches for him during both his first and second terms as chief of state.

On Oct. 15, 1953, President of the thigh-ance College as the high-ance College as the high-ent Eisenhower deliv-i an address at Defi-e College as the high-it of cornerstone-lay-

GEN. DWIGHT D. EISENHOWER

ance Cotege as the nignlight of correstone-laying ceremonies for the Anthony Wayne Library for American Studies.

He made a plea for greater support of the small, privately-endowed colleges like Defance. I remember the tumultous occasion rather well inasmuch as I covered the story for The News-Sentinel in Ft. Wayne, Ind.

SO, I THOUGHT, all I have to do is mention the name of Ike's old friend and perhaps get an autograph and maybe a few words that would give me an exclusive story. Overcoming a native timidity, I walked rather non-chalantly up to the two head tables. Standing there at the end of the aisle between them was a tall, slim, red-the end of the aiste between usen we headed fellow.

As soon as he saw me approaching, he began to shake his head. The general and his party were eating dinner and couldn't be disturbed, was the answer. Explaining my purpose brought only the same response.

Seems that the people I saw talking to the general were those seated at the head tables, not anyone from were tho audience.

And that's how I met Ike—almost.
(See CITY BEAT, 5-B)

NOW THAT the plans for the march are complete and next Sunday is the day, we must compliment the council for a program that promises to be both inspiratio

The march has been planned by and will the march has been planned by and will be made up of local clergy from all faiths and laymen who wish to make a public showing that they are not pleased with the

A Wise Change Was Made

ing that all men be equal in our nation.

They want this demonstration to be a witness that they are protesting all forms of discrimination based on race, color or

THIS PROCESSION is not geared against our community. It has arisen because its planners believe that our residents have not had an opportunity to publicly profess their feelings on the matter. And they are now offering that opportunity to anyone who wishes to take part.

The procession will not go through the center of town with brass bands and

It will start at the Congregational Church on Woodward with prayers and end at Holy Name Church on Harmon, three blocks away, with a hymn.

THE NATURE of the exemony pre-cludes extremists from interfering and gives the community a chance to exhibit its true feelings.

gives the community a its true feelings.

Again, we compliment the Council of Churches for its well-planned program of moderate action and hope our residents accept "the hand of Christian Fellowship"

A baln in the success of the venture.

From The Eccentric's Point of View ...

Harvey Wheeler, a political science professor the is a co-author of the novel "Fail-Safe," wor-ies about other things than accidental war. Just ries about other things than accidental war. Just now he has become concerned about the chance that democracy is being weakened by a tendency to give scientists too much of a say in settling political and governmental problems. This is not an idle fear. The danger is closely related to that about which President Eisenhower warned in his an one tear. The anager is closely related to that about which President Eisenhower warned in his farewell address upon leaving office—the danger of domination by a military-industrial complex. For scientists, more and more, are declaively involved in the related undertakings of industry and the military. Wheeler suggests, in the Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, that the scientific resolu-tion demands a "new science-of politics." His ideas on the subject, and those of others who as the danger, should be theroughly emplored.

McCormack doesn't want to talk about productial succession. Millions of Americans not o want to talk about it, they'd like to see someth done about it.

ESTABLISHED IN 1878

A Free, Responsible and Aggressive Press Is Democracy's First Line of Defense

PUBLISHER: PAUL N. AVERILL ISOCIATE PUBLISHER: HENRY M. HOGAN, MANAGINE EDITOR: KENNETH R. WRAYE ADVERTISING MANAGER: ARTHUR SHAFER

George R. Averill, Editor Emeritus