It was an unwillingness to release information from official sources that forced reporters to seek details wherever they could get them.

And I might add that the reporters let their readers know that much of their information was coming from children, not from officials.

And I might add that the police are adults passing the buck to the kids—and I don't mean the customary monetary buck.

Incidentally, The Birmingham Eccentric was credited by Birmingham police with having the most accurate account of the killing.

NEWSPAPERS' cannot publish only the good news and ignore the bad. They would not long exist if they failed to fulfill their true function. And where would our communication be without newspapers?

Instead of ridiculing newspapers, people like Merlerle Smith might learn that cooperation with rather than resistance is the way to achieve greater success.

Newsmen can be trusted to keep confidences and to exercise good judgment.

As I said in the beginning, it isn't the kids; it's the adults.

Three representatives of The Birmingham Eccentric will play important roles during the annual conference of the National Suburban Press Foundation to be held in Chicago next week.

Publisher Paul N. Averill, president of the Foundation, will preside at the publishers' seminar during the two-day national conference.

Ken Weaver, managing editor, will lead the discussion during a segment of the editorial seminar.

Ward Ouradnik, administrative director of the newspaper, is discussion leader at the circulation promotion seminar.

It indicates, too, how Cadillac's combination of functional styling, scientific sound-roofing and advanced new suspension have reduced to an almost unbelievable degree the sounds normally associated with travel.

And, even more importantly, it speaks of the car's great engineering. Cadillac's dynamic new engine operates with flawless precision, despite its record power. Its new transmissions, both the Hydra-Matic and the Turbo Hydra-Matic, translate that power into smooth, hushed response... and combined with exclusive True-Center drive line, virtually eliminate vibration.
