 of arts degree in math and physics from Ohio Wesleyan University in three years and went on to achieve a master's degree in 1958 in nuclear science from the University of Michigan. Between the two degrees, he also acquired a wife, the former Ann Marie Groves, daughter of Mrs. Wiley E. Groves and the late Mr. Groves, and three children: David, 4½; Elizabeth, 2½; and Janet, 2. Schooling has not finished for Van Deusen, however, as he still must complete his thesis in order to receive his Ph.D. degree from U. of M. Unlike some scientists working for an automotive company who care less about automobiles, Van Deusen's interest is keen. "I've owned 56 cars, and really enjoy fixing them up so they'll run like clockwork," he said. "I drove stock cars from 1962 to '65, and it's a great thrill seeing your mechanical achievements in competition." AS HE HAS blended his major interest—physics—with his major avocation—the automobile—Van Deusen is also capable of combining the interests of his employer with his zeal for scientific achieve- ment. "The complexity of science to- day requires the backing of large companies," said Van Deusen, who wears the Chrysler pentastar, or emblem, in his lapel. "Unlike the Thomas Edison of yesteryear, individuals cannot com- pete with the current modes and speeds of science. Tools of science are expensive, such as the com- puter, and no individual can have one in his basement. "A scientist must also keep in constant communication with peo- ple working in your field from all parts of the world. "We're no longer working in Newton's time when you could just drop an apple in order to achieve a scientific discovery."

ALTHOUGH HE has had "in- numerable" scientific papers pub- lished and is in demand as a speaker at science conventions throughout the United States, Van Deusen feels that few scientists today are on the threshold of dis- covery. "Most are trying to make prac- tical uses of current information. Van Deusen fits easily into the general conception of "what a young scientist should be." Fair- skinned and red-haired, he is tall and slender, deliberating before speaking in his well-modulated tone. His mild manner is confident, backed by the know-how of learn- ing and the expectation of a dy- namic future. His general philosophy can be easily derived from his advice to youths who are undecided about a scientific career: "You must like to probe—and possess an inherent driving force that will bring you to understand- ing the physical world in which you live. Van Deusen—a young man in a young man's field.

This & That

 ace. That face expresses the God- less thinking behind it. That face may now and then smile and look pleasant, even when it momentarily confronts the leaders of free peo- ple. But behind this more agreeable mask is the hateful, scowling con- tentance. Yes, the price of liberty and freedom is high . . . not only in money, but in the necessary eternal vigilance required to keep a free nation free! May the United States never forget this!

San You have heard that true Biblical saying that goes, in part: "Man does not live by bread alone . . ." To depend wholly upon the things that money can buy is never de- voted to be on the road to realizing inner happiness. Indeed, if fi- nancial affluence alone could bring happiness, then most people would be happier today than are. One's happiness re- quires a diet of spiritual man- na, digested WITHIN!

A California professor recently openly advocated the idea of mar- ried men developing a pay amount- ing to the male's nature re- quires that he aim his animalistic tendency in the directions of tar- gets other than the woman he married. Presumably, his argu- ment includes polyandry for the females so inclined. Which causes Sam the Sage of Big Beaver, to ask: "Is this professor on the pay- rolls of some of those movie stars?"

Questionnaire Sent To Area Students

What kind of youngsters are the Birmingham area teen-agers? What are their likes and their dislikes? A questionnaire designed to get answers to these questions was distributed to Birmingham and area schools last week. The results will be announced in The Eccentric. Copies of the questionnaire, prepared by Dave Zimmer, Seaholm senior who is serving as teen consultant to The Ec- centric, were distributed to students at Seaholm, Groves, Bloomfield Hills, Marian, Brother Rice, Detroit Country Day, Cranbrook and Kings- wood. In all, some 6,500 copies went to students in the 10th, 11th and 12th grades. ZIMMER SAID he hopes to have the results tabulated by Friday. "In using the results," he said, "the figures from all of the schools will be totaled together, so that we have a picture of the average Birmingham area teen-ager. "The names of the schools will not be used, and any comparisons will be just between grades or sex of the local teen-agers as a whole. No comparison will be made be- tween public, private and parochial schools. Questions are designed to get teen-agers' views of smoking, drinking, driving, education and the like. HERE ARE SOME sam- ple questions: Do you smoke at least one cig- aret a day? If you do, would you like to quit? Should the smoking age be lowered to 18? Do you ever drink alcoholic bev- erages? If you do, why? Should the drinking age be lowered to 18? Do you think you are a good automobile driver? Have you ever been arrested for a moving viola- tion? The results from the question- naires may also be used for feature articles in The Eccentric and for discussion at teen symposiums. Getting ready to sell your car? Advertise it in the Classified Ad-

Wanted: Information On B'ham's History

Know of any houses in Birming- ham that are 100 or more years old? If so, the Birmingham Centennial Committee's heritage and his- tory unit would like to hear from you. The heritage-history group is compiling information on cen- tennial homes in Birmingham. It wants to know all about houses that are at least 100 years old. Also, this committee will be re- sponsible for placing on display in local stores furniture and arti- facts that date back to Birming- ham's beginnings as a village. FOR EXAMPLE, a rocker and a table from the John Hunter home at 264 Brown, the oldest house in Birmingham, will be on display. A table, a gun and an arrow- head from the Clara Benedict farm, the oldest home in Oakland Coun- ty, also will be displayed. James K. Flack, history and heri- tage committee chairman, said his group is interested in hearing from Birmingham and area residents who have information or material relating to the origin and develop- ment of Birmingham. He may be reached at 286 Lar- chesia Drive, Birmingham. LETTERS, ARTICLES, pamph- lets, photographs and other such material may be sent to the Birming- ham Centennial Committee in care of The Birmingham Eccentric 1225 Bowers. The Eccentric is publishing a Commemorative Centennial Edition for May 14, and stories and pic- tures will be accepted for it.

"Activities Centre for the Birmingham Area"

Founded in 1923, The Com- munity House is unique in this area. Over 150,000 persons — members of some 1,400 clubs and groups—will use its facili- ties to attend 3,500 meetings during the coming year. One hundred per cent of the cost of operation is con- tributed by those who benefit from its existence — we who live and work in this area.

The Community House re- ceives no support from the United Foundation or from tax dollars. It is completely de- pendent upon your generosity to continue serving the com- munity and maintain its warm, home-like atmosphere. It is your Community House. Use it as much as you can; but by all means, support it— whether you use it or not.

Our goal for 1964 is $55,000. Please help us to realize this goal.
