

Hills Citizens' Group Lauds Survey Response

To the Citizens of Bloomfield Hills:

To the 698 citizens of Bloomfield Hills who showed their keen interest in the controversial two-story versus three-story limit on apartments by signing and returning their survey postcards, we would like to say "thank you."

To the 82 per cent of these citizens who expressed their preference for the two-story limitation, we are wondering if they join us in our bewilderment that such an overwhelming expression can be ignored by the people we elected to represent us.

IT IS DIFFICULT for us to understand how Messers Beresford, Blanchard, Colombo and Lee can make such a decision in the face of

- the standing vote at the January public hearing, in which the two vs. three story apartment issue was thoroughly aired;
- The Birmingham Eccentric's telephone survey; and
- The Citizens' Committee's postcard survey.

Your Citizens' Committee feels that this controversial area of the zoning ordinance is still a matter of limiting apartment dwellings to two stories or increasing them to three and opening the gates for commercial property investors to be encouraged that further increases are in order.

IN THE OPINION of this committee, this increase is a significant step in changing the basic character of one of the finest single-home residential communities in the United States.

The Citizens' Committee is studying this matter for further action.

it. I plan to sell my home," he added.

MRS. A. M. Lane said she and her husband "are very much opposed to it."

"It would turn the street into a truck route and decrease the value of our property," she said.

Another man, who wished to remain unidentified, said it would be less expensive to open up Lincoln than 14 Mile Road. He also suggested that Birmingham take the parking off Maple Road and open Southfield "all the way through to Woodward Ave."

"I don't think The Eccentric has reported the facts in the proper light. Due to the publicity saying the road is definitely going through, property values in Beverly Hills have already been lowered."

THOMAS KAVANAGH, who lives at 32865 Faircrest, where 14 Mile Road now ends, said he is not in favor of it, but feels "it is inevitable."

"The people of Birmingham's desire for it is too strong. Personally, I think it will spoil the whole area residentially."

Robert F. Stansberry, 19660 Sunnyslope, is the closest resident to the proposed path of 14 Mile where it would meet Eovrgreen.

"Most of the residents here feel that the City of Birmingham is pushing the road, not the county road commission," he said. "We are all violently opposed."

"We don't want trucks barreling through here. There would be a tremendous loss in property values, as well as the nuisance problem."

STANSBERRY said there are many residents living in Birmingham who also oppose opening of the road.

Beverly Hills voters in 1961 turned down the proposal, 7-1. At that time the village's share of the cost would have been $41,250.

Birmingham and the county have now agreed to bear the full cost of the project, with the city paying $68,000 and the county $362,000.

But to some residents of Beverly Hills there is much more involved than money.

C of C Queries Businessmen On Services

The Birmingham Chamber of Commerce has sent out more than 1,100 questionnaires to area businessmen as part of its current re-evaluation program.

A special 14-member committee, headed by Robert L. Kilpatrick, is "surveying, re-evaluating and revitalizing" the complete structure and operation of the chamber.

The purpose of the survey is to determine the most important areas of service which the chamber can best fill to serve the total community needs.

The questionnaire lists various activities which the chamber now takes part in and asks the businessman's opinion of the role of the group in each.

IT ALSO lists possible additional services the chamber could provide, such as a reference file on high school and college students available for summer or part-time employment.

Other possible services that might be provided by the chamber include search for and screening of new industries and businesses to locate in this area; more and better parking facilities; promotion of peripheral traffic routes around the central business district; and more information regarding taxation and legislative matters affecting business and industry.

Knowles Smith, newly-appointed executive director of the chamber, said replies to the questionnaire are due back in the chamber office by Monday.
