Human Relations Council Slates Detroit Speaker

Jim Rose, director of housing and community services for the Detroit Commission on Community Relations, was the speaker at a meeting of the Birmingham-Bloomfield Council on Human Relations in the Birmingham Community House.

Rose formerly was assistant to the dean of men at the University of Detroit and is the author of numerous articles on human relations problems. One of his most recent articles, "Racial Anatomy of a City," appeared in the "New University Thought," a Wayne State University publication. He holds degrees in economics and business administration from the University of Nebraska.

The Birmingham - Bloomfield Council was formed last year for the purpose of studying and sharing thinking and findings on intergroup relations, and developing approaches toward improvement on intergroup relations in the geographical areas of the Birmingham and Bloomfield Hills school districts. Alan W. Jolly, 777 Randall, Birmingham, is president of the council.
