

Citizens Committee Busy Talking to Build

Speakers scheduled by the Citizens Committee for the proposed Oakland County Community College are having a busy week in the Birmingham area.

Almost all organizations in Birmingham have been contacted and asked to provide time in their programs for a speaker to explain the issues relating to the proposal, slated for the June 8 annual school election ballot.

The speakers bureau consists of 70 people from many areas of Oakland County. They are educators from the local schools and colleges, business executives, political leaders, and many other men and women who are leaders in various community activities.

THE ALTRUSA CLUB heard Mrs. John Fingen discuss the need in Oakland County for a community college when they met Monday evening at The Community House.

Mrs. Fingen, a member of the Governor's Commission on Status of Women and a 1960 delegate to the Republican National Convention, said "Oakland County is the second largest county in the state and one of the most prosperous, but it offers nothing in the way of post-high technical and semi-professional training.

"Jobs go begging because the average high school graduate is not qualified for the technical office or sales position opened. A community college using the tremendous resources of Oakland county would provide unlimited opportunities for our rapidly increasing college age population."

JAMES DICKERSON, assistant to the chancellor at Oakland University, told the Quarten PTA that county would provide education for the whole county.

Gamma Phi Beta sorority scheduled the vice president of the Community College Citizens Committee as a speaker.

Mrs. George Mosher, also a member of the Michigan State Tax Structure Committee and the State Legislative Committee, told the group, "community college speakers would lend support to local school tax issues in districts having millage or bond questions on the same ballot. The issue is not either local school millage or college tax support, but a comprehensive program of education for the whole county."

THE OPTOMISTS Club heard Richard Perry on the community college issues. Said Perry, a former business
