Allergy Ills Relieved
By Air Conditioners

If asthma or hay fever has you wheezing and sneezing your way through the summer, take heart. You may be able to cut down on the ugly syrups, stuffy nose and labored breathing by simply turning on the room air conditioner.

The Medical Committee of the Allergy Foundation of America says that as long as you can stay in an air-conditioned room, your symptoms will often be relieved. And if you have an air-conditioned home, you won't have to be as apt to be kept awake in the night's battle for a breath of pest-free air.

"Extreme cooling will often irritate the membranes of the nose and bronchial tubes," the voluntary health organization says in its booklet, "Asthma, Hay Fever and Other Allergies."

Recognizing the benefits of air conditioning, the Federal Government now allows a medical expense tax deduction for air-conditioning purchases when physicians prescribe them as medically necessary for heart patients, asthmatics, and allergics.

The deduction went into effect for the first time in 1962.

THERE WERE 97 million days of restricted activity reported due to asthma and hay fever in 1949 and 1950. The victims were allergic, or unusually sensitive, to air-borne dust, mold spores and pollen. From woods, grasses, trees and plants which do not affect nonallergic persons.

Seasonal hay fever especially is caused almost entirely by these air-borne allergens or irritants. Room air conditioners can reduce the amount of pollen in the air at the height of the ragweed season by as much as 90 per cent, tests by Dr. Orren D. Chapman, head of the Psychology Department at Syracuse University, showed.

OTHER FORMS of relief from the distressing symptoms of asthma and hay fever are drugs and a series of injections which help desensitize allergic patients as long as they continue the treatment.

Immunization by a single injection is also under study. At the present time, the Allergy Foundation states in its pamphlet. The free pamphlet may be obtained by writing the Allergy Foundation of America, 881 Second Avenue, New York, 17, N. Y.

Carport Walls Offer Space For Storage

Does the back of the house complain because it doesn't have any room where he can store his sports gear and his fishing and hunting equipment?

Many families have discovered a new utility room right under their noses where sports storage units can be installed. It is the back of the carport.

Storage units can be built airtight so that guns and other sports gear will be well protected. The units can be locked for added protection.

They can be designed wide enough to include a work bench, a tack box, a gun and fishing rod cases, cupboard for camping equipment and other specialized sporting storage.

They SHOULD be framed in solid 2 x 6's and you can use the same color siding on the outside of these storage units as is used on the rest of the home. They can be stained or painted to match the siding of the house.

The units can be hung from the carport ceiling to keep them free of the ground, or they can be set on posts a foot above the ground. If the doors open into the area where the cars are parked, it's a good idea to install sliding doors rather than hinged doors.

Some of the storage units along the carport walls are ingeniously designed to accommodate all members of the family in their storage needs.

How to Clean Your Lawn Furniture, Cook-Out Equipment

Lawn furniture and cook-out equipment can present big cleaning jobs come spring. Here's an easy way to get everything shiny in a hurry.

Apply oven cleaner to the really dirty parts—legs, decorative trim—that was stored without being properly cleaned—and chrome cleaner to other items.

To eliminate the added chore of washing dishes, simply wipe all cleaner with paper towels. When the job is done, wash away the remainder, just turn the garden hose on everything, wipe dry and polish with handfuls of paper towels.

Lights Give Dreamy Glow
To Pools

A setting sun doesn't have to be the signal that the day's fun around the new back yard pool has ended.

Up to 100 hours of nighttime pool-side entertainment can be gained every month of the outdoor swimming season merely by providing the right kind of overhead and underwater lighting.

Post-mounted yard lanterns give a soft illumination to pool decks, patios and walkways. Mushroom lighting units—cone-shaped, mounted on stumps—are increasingly popular.

AUTOMATIC controls that switch on the poolside lighting system at sunset allow the fun to go on without interruption. They also discourage intruders if the family happens to be out for the evening.

Underwater lighting units are now being used almost as much for dramatic "glow" effects as for swimmers' convenience. A glowing pool has much the same hypnotic, "dreamy" influence as a fireplaces on those around it.

About two to four watts of illumination in the pool are recommended by most electric companies for each square feet of water surface. The unit here (18 ft. x 32 ft.) would require surface illumination of between 1,000 and 2,000 watts.

IT'S IMPORTANT, lighting experts agree, to "safety" lights so that it does not glare in swimmers' eyes. Lighting should come from more than one direction to give a sense of security and more uniform illumination.

Don't try to install your own own surfacing lights unless you know what you're about. This is a job for a qualified electrical contractor.

Potted Plants Make Creative Decoration

Homeowners can make many interesting uses of potted plants for decorative touches in gardens, on patios and terraces and along walks, to enhance all outdoor activity this spring and summer.

Plants in sturdy clay pots can be attached to railings, walls and posts with clips or plant rings, for color accents. On a white fence you might try a combination of blue lobelia and purple heliotrope, an eye-catching combination.
