PUZZLE NO. 817

Festival

 170 concerts before more than 750,000 people. The price tag for all of this: $1,000,000 annually. Like all major orchestras the Detroit Symphony earns but half of its annual keep.

"All of this impressive operation has helped make possible the Meadow Brook Festival for the Detroit Symphony will serve as the heart of the project.

"BY TONIGHT Ehrling and the orchestra will have spent five intensive hours in rehearsal. The program will be as finished and polished as those the orchestra presents during the formal winter season in Ford Auditorium.

"The stage is set. Let the music play. And let us all enjoy the rare opportunity offered on our very doorstep at Oakland University."

Bham Resident Cast in Ibsen Play

Ann Garrison, 4250 Bousie Circle, Birmingham, will play the part of Aase in "Peer Gynt," Henrik Ibsen's comedy about the adventures of who gets on in the world by compromising. The play will be presented in the Intramural Theatre at Oakland University at 8:30 p.m., Aug. 2-4. Directing the production is William Gregory, former director of the Vanguard Theatre.

Six Indian Tribes Roamed Michigan In Days of Yore

"Michigan Indians in the early 17th century spent less time in war pursuits than in agriculture and hunting, enjoying a peaceful isolation from the Iroquois of the Eastern seaboard and the Sioux of the West," says Prof. Philip F. Mason, Wayne State University historian and archivist.

Later in the century, the Iroquois, armed with firearms and other weapons of their British allies, commenced their murderous raids on the Michigan tribes.

Six main tribes combed Michigan's forests for food during this century and also raised corn, squash, rice and tobacco near their semi-permanent settlements scattered about the state.

THE TRIBES were the Chippewas, sometimes called the Ojibwas, divided between the Upper and Lower Peninsulas; the Ottawas in the northern half of the Lower Peninsula; the Potawatomis in the southern part of the Lower Peninsula; the Miamis in the southwestern section of the state; the Wyandots, often called Hurons, in the Detroit area; and the Menominees, or "Wild Rice People," in the county which now bears their name.

The peaceful disposition of these tribes made it possible for them to intermingle without conflict so that there were no distinct tribal boundaries.

MOST OF the major towns and cities in Michigan today were one of the cities of thriving Indian villages, many of them only semi-permanent because of the Indian's awareness of the need for avoiding soil and game depletion.

White settlers, like the Indians before them, also chose water sites because of the transportation and other advantages they offered.

In the Upper Peninsula, Sault Ste. Marie, St. Ignace, Escanaba, L'Anse and Munising were the sites of major Indian villages. Lower Peninsula sites included Mackinaw City, Petoskey, Traverse City, Grand Rapids, Lansing, Ionia, Saginaw, Bay City, Detroit, Midland, Flint, Kalamazoo, Niles, Battle Creek, Monroe, Jackson and Muskegon.

TODAY THERE are four Indian reservations in Michigan. The largest one is in the L'Anse area of Baraga County in the Upper Peninsula. This has a population of 1,300.

The other Upper Peninsula reservation are the Pinnaculus Indian Community in Menominee County with 140 persons and the Bay Mills Community in Chippewa County, numbering about 400 persons.

Among the stars at the free Music Shell programs at the Michigan State Fair, Aug. 28 through Sept. 7, will be Count Basie and his band, Nancy Wilson, the New Christy Minstrels, and the Jimmy Wilkins band.

B'ham Girl Romps With Slaves, Genies In Aladdin Play

The Princess Adora, her father the Sultan, slaves, genies, an African magician and best of all Aladdin are loose on the Oakland University campus for "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp." Julie Cratch of Birmingham is cast in the play as Kalissas.

The performers will don their magical and royal garbs July 31 and get into a glittering cave in the Intramural Building Theatre for the production, presented by students of the Children's Drama Program sponsored by the division of continuing education. Curtain time is 8 p.m.

The genies, slaves and royalty are all in the 9-12-year-old age group and planning a production of particular entertainment for children on a summer night. Admission to the play is tailored to pizzy-bank prices.
