

OU Presents Students in Two Dramas

Oakland University, Rochester, is on the straw hat theatre circuit for this week end only with productions of a children's play, "Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp," scheduled for Friday and Saturday, and "Peer Gynt" to be presented Sunday, Monday and Tuesday evenings in the Intramural Building Theatre.

The curtain will rise on Aladdin's glittering cave at 8 p.m. in a production peopled entirely by 9-12-year-old children who have studied theatre at Oakland this summer. Director for the tale of genies, slaves, royalty and magic is former Birmingham resident Fred Coffin whose mother, Winnie, was originally to have directed the children's summer theatre.

After she was involved in an auto accident in May, Fred took over in the best theatrical show-goer tradition.

Fred Coffin directed the sophomore show at the University of Michigan a year ago and has led the Oakland children from paper bag dramatics through to tomorrow night's presentation. Winnie Coffin, now nearly recuperated, will be in the audience.

The annual Detroit Student Press Association Summer Workshops, sponsored by the University of Detroit Journalism Department, trains student journalists in both newspaper and yearbook production.

Directed by the Rev. James Magner, S.J., chairman of the U. of D. Journalism Department, the workshops are held three times during the regular University Summer Session.

Editors attending the Newspaper Workshop spend the first week in classroom instruction, learning the skills involved in writing, editing and publishing a newspaper. During the second week, student journalists acquire first-hand experience by publishing an issue of the Varsity News, U. of D. student magazine.

IN THE YEARBOOK workshop, student editors prepare comprehensive dummies for their own high school yearbooks. These models are the exact number of pages to be printed in the editors' year-

"It is important to try and get a good description of the man." Although Mrs. Cantor could only see the silhouette of the intruder, she described him as about 6 feet tall.

Mrs. Heitsch said the man in her home was "tall and lean." The Birmingham and township police departments are cooperating in efforts to apprehend the burglar, Keller said.

The method of entry and concentration on stealing jewelry fits the "modus operandi" of the cat burglar who has been looting homes in Grosse Pointe for several years, Keller said.

"This burglar doesn't ransack the whole house, but goes directly to the master bedroom," he added. In his Grosse Pointe forays the cat burglar uses a mechanical device to twist off doorknobs. His most recent visit to that area netted $80,000 in jewels about three weeks ago.

Cranbrook Institute of Science is the largest science museum in the metropolitan Detroit area.

Over 500 student journalists participate annually in University of Detroit Summer High School Journalism Workshops. In addition to class work, the DSPA schedules a social program for the editors which includes a theatre party, a picnic, and mixers.

large with the establishment of a storm drain fund that would grow larger year by year. He cited Hazel Park as an example of a city which "did nothing and was hit with an 8-mill assessment for storm drainage."

"I hope we never see the time when we become involved in a major storm drain program where we are loaded down with millage," Case said.

"I'd like to see us face up to our drainage problems before they become monsters like in some municipalities," he added.

Trustee Robert Sinclair questioned the advisability of financing storm drains piecemeal.

"ARE YOU going to ask for one-half mill next year and one-half mill next year?" he asked.

"Local units of government are all too prone to take on obligations a piece at a time—and keep coming back for more," Sinclair said. "I feel we need to determine the total scope of the project."

In other business, the board: • Tabled for further study a petition from Bloomfield Estates subdivision residents opposing the removal of trees at Avondale and Charing Cross roads. The county wants to straighten Avondale at the intersection, which would necessitate destroying several trees.

• AUTHORIZED Clerk Deloris V. Little to cremate bonds of Charing Cross Road and Berkshire Road Improvement and Lone Pine and Greenwich Road Improvements.

• Denied a request for a street name change in Vernor Estates subdivision because it might be confusing for the fire department.
