Forum to Discuss Consumer Interests
 Detroit will become the third city in the nation to bring together consumer, processor and manufacturer in public forum when the Great Lakes Consumer Conference is held Sept. 21 in the city's Cobo Hall.

Red Tape Stops Change Says Educator

The growing bureaucracy in American educational organization tends to block the removal of obsolete practices, Gale Jensen, University of Michigan professor of education, claims.
 "The prevalent forms of educational bureaucracy offer little hope for removing obsolescence and increasing productivity," Jensen says.
 "Rather, with increasing size, the security problems of internal control and external adjustment become greater," he says.
 "THIS RESULTS in more resources of the organization having to be allocated to the creation and maintenance of new roles primarily concerned with governmental and security matters; for example, personnel officers, assistant and associate superintendents and deans, vice-presidents, business managers, assistant principals, legal specialists, etc."
 "Under this kind of bureaucratic organization, the more competent teachers become and the more zealous they are to remove obsolescence in educational organization, the more frustrated they will become."
 Jensen says teachers have several alternatives. They can quit, as many do each year. They can become administrators and devote their time to security and administrative matters. Or they can "join the union and become involved in a tug-of-war over salaries, job security and working conditions."

with no danger of any loss of productivity.
 "There also is a need to develop training and experimental programs which ultimately will provide the understanding and know-how necessary for resolving organizational difficulties."
